Budgeting for a Better Nebraska

Without question, the Nebraska legislature has begun one of its most important budgeting sessions in recent history. Facing a projected budget shortfall of approximately $1 billion brings with it the challenges of making fundamental changes to how the state allocates its money.

Gone are the days of being able to make superficial cuts with the intention of reinstalling them in coming years. As a result, the Platte Institute for Economic Research has brought forth its top 10 ways for the legislature to make fundamental changes to the state budget which will help solve issues of today and help prevent such a crisis in the future.
